The size of this year's appropriations bills now pending in Congress indicates that the surplus will be taken

It is not likely that the Cleveland convention will quote liberally from the speech of Senator Hoar to sustain the Administration's policy in the Philippines.

And now they are booming Col. Myron T. Herrick for Governor. If Gen. Dick don't keep a vigitant watch there will be so many candidates in the field his early boom for gnbernatorial honors will be frostbitten.-Wadsworth Banger.

Don't borrow trouble, neighbor.

A Michigan man who died last week left $60,000 to establish a home for indigent old women at Fairmount, Ind. In his will he wrote it "indignant old women," and now there is talk of testing the validity of the will. The testator probably shared Mrs. Hetty Green's prejudice against lawyers.

A German firm has offered the Chinese government $15,000,000 for the monepoly of opium sales throughout the empire. The Chinese government ought to be engaged to collect campaign funds from the American trusts. It might beat Mr. Hanna's record along this line.

Senator Foraker's retirement as official keynote sounder for his party in Ohio doesn't mean that this week's interesting. There are several other delegation. Akron could provide one, if called upon to do so.

Several million copies of speeches by Republican Congressmen have been printed and stored away at Washington for use in the "educational" camm next fall. Senator Hoar's great speech on the Philippines does not come within the "educational" classi-

Some of the Republican newspapers of the State are advising the Governor to call a special session of the Legislature to correct some of the blunders of the last session, chiefly those attending the taxation legislation. Better wait until another General sembly is elected. The people may have more confidence in it.

One of the Medina county papers remarks that "Congressman Beidler is in position to accomplish more good for his district than any man who has represented it in the last decade." This is highly flattering to Judge Phillips, the one-term Congressman whom the Medina county editors were supporting two years ago.

A New York dispatch announces that "a conference was held today at the Fifth ave. hotel between Senator Platt and Chairman Dunn, of the Republican State committee, and afterward it was announced that Governor tion." A State convention seems to be about as prefunctory an event in New York as in Ohio.

The Youngstown Vindicator is trying to convince the Mayor and Probate Judge of that city that they have no legal right to have a deadlock in regard to the appointment of City Commissioners; that the expressed intent of the law is that appointments shall be made immediately after the organization of Council, each year. We had thought all along that loungstown people have a great deal to learn about the City Commissioner law before they will be as well experienced as Akron people in its clastic and undiscovered possibilities, and now we know it. It seems that our Youngstown neighbors are now having their first doze of deadlock medicine. They will not be apt subjects for municipal reform, however, until they've been treated to a few years of government by proxy. Take your medicine, neighbors. Akron people might have been able to rid themselves of a thoroughly had form of government but for your indifference,

REPUBLICAN SITUATIONS. (From the Cincinnati Enquirer)

The latest information is that Senator Forsker will not preside at the Republican State Convention in Cleveland next week, though the "powers that be" selected him for that duty. No doubt he has good reasons for push ing the honor sside. He is fixed for his second term in the Senate, and perhaps does not want to be involved n Presidential politics at this time. As a presiding officer at the convention it would become his duty to make a speech, and perhaps he would not care to do that and warp his remarks to the plans of those who will manage the affair, and whose friendship for him is not of the warmest sort. Taking him as a possible Presidential nominee himself, or an advocate of the renomination of President Roosevelt, it would not be unnatural for him to desire to keep away from the entanglements of the Hanna boom. Though Mr. Hanna might prefer restraint in his prospects for the present, it is easy to see that the State con vention might get away from judicious to Go 80. Senator Foraker has possibly done his share of extending the "glad hand" across the vawning chasm of Republican politics in this state. He went to the support of the Happa faction for the sake of making Ohio unanimous for McKinley. He was promised certain support from the Hanna people. He has received it. He has had nothing more, though, than he has earned. He has been elected twice to the United States Senate, and has taken a position in that body that authorizes an conrol. In the event of so early a stampede for Mr. Hanna, Mr. Foraker, being present, and presiding, would feel obliged to join in the acclaim, though it would be against his own interests

Of course, nobody can harbor even the suspicion that The Enquirer is speaking for Senator Forsker. This family journal is simply "meddling," as usual, but it is presenting a thing which no thoughtful man can deny at least plausibility to.

ambition to stand alone.

It certainly would seem that Sens tor Foraker would like to act independently in matters looking to the Presidential campaign of 1904, though all the while preserving the amenities in Ohio. About all of interest there will be to do at the convention in Cleveland will be to make a platform. That will be difficult, but Mr. Foraker could not make it easier. The situation is one convention at Cleveland will be less beyond political shrewdness. There are strong intimations that subjects keynote sounders among the Ohio which will be difficult to handle in a "declaration of principles" will be dodged, and that the men in charge will devote themselves to organization. It will not be Senator Fornker's or ganization, and it may be wise for him not to commit himself to it.

THE LATE E. L. GODKIN.

(From Springfield Republican. )

The passing of Edwin Lawrence Godkin, who was for 18 years, from 1882 to 1900, editor of the New York Evening Post, and before that editor and founder of the Nation weekly newspaper, is the going of one who had held a large place in American journalism. His public work ended with his retirement from the Evening Post, caused by failing health. Now and then after leaving his editorship there appeared in the many of his acts are such as to elicit Post semi-editorial communications above the well-known initials "E. L. G.," presenting the virile views of this veteran onlooker, but they came with something of a reminiscent flavor. The period when his aggressive and sharply critical personality impressed with striking force the editorial utterances of the Evening Post had come to an end, and Mr. Godkin's contributions served by contrast to make this recognizable to the average reader. His personality was of the challenging and commanding sort, wherein courage and high gifts as an editorial writer were not always informed with tact, albeit Odell is practically sure of renomina- always with honesty of conviction and great power.

It has sometimes been said that Mr. Godkin was without a peer in the newspaper world of his time as the writer of trenchant, biting English; but account should be taken of the late Charles A. Dann, with the difference that while the editor of the Sun preferred the short editorial and made his page a model of style, the editor of the Evening Post by choice wrote long and scholarly leaders, masterpieces in their way, as became the work of a man who strength and beauty may go together.

Both had remarkable autitude. pungent paragraphing. But the great difference between them lay in the fact that the note of insincerity, of sardonic mockery of things genuine and high. never marred the writing of air. Godkin. He believed as he wrote. Irritant and repelling, rather than philosophic and converting, as his work often was, it was beyond challenge genuine. Mr. Godkin contributed much to maintain ing the place of exceptional dignity and influence which the Evening Post has held for so many years. An all-and in his personal aloofness from men and affairs, the want of contact with politicians of high and low degree, there was some want of clear sight and accurate differentiation that he never realized. His clear-cut mind, his distinct gifts as a leader writer, his brave flinging of the lash when he deemed it deserved, the pluck that stood by unpopular issues because they were right, unwavering and defautthese things made Mr. Godkin both feared and respected, and contributed to a life work full of value to his
